

HYPERALLERGIC

Your Guide to Navigating New York City's Fall Art Fairs

We can't promise you won't get lost in a maze of booths, but we can steer you to the fairs worth the trip.

Rhea Nayyar and Maya Pontone | August 18, 2024

Joana Choumali, "I AM US" (2024), mixed media, embroidery, paint, manual collage, sheer fabric, and digital photograph printed on canvas (photo by Robert Vinas Jr., courtesy the artist and Sperone Westwater, New York)

As a bittersweet reminder that our scalding summer is coming to a close, the fall art fair season is turning the corner shortly in New York City, with a steady lineup of 12 shows from Labor Day through November 2. With more time than ever to plan your trajectory, we've made it even easier for you to coordinate your schedule with a handy-dandy guide featuring the Armory Show, the Spring Break Art Show, the Brooklyn Art Book Fair, the debut of Latinx Project NYU's La Feria, and many more. Don't forget to check out the map at the end of the list so you can figure out where you're supposed to be!

Armory Week The Armory Show

September 6–8 | thearmoryshow.com

Javits Center, 429 Eleventh Avenue, Midtown West, Manhattan

Sohrab Hura, “Little fish got a bit too curious” (2024), soft pastel on paper, 19 3/4 x 27 1/2 inches (50 x 70 cm) (image courtesy the artist and Experimenter, Kolkata)

The Armory Show has all the bells and whistles you could ask for, packaged neatly in white-walled booths lining the gargantuan Javits Center. Growing at a steady rate year after year, the Armory is celebrating its 30th anniversary with over 235 participating galleries representing 35 different countries. Site-specific works by Sanford Biggers, Dominique Fung, Nicholas Galanin, and Joyce J. Scott convene at the center of the fair through the Platforms program, while queer and postcolonial narratives dominate the Focus section.